DEMOCRACY OR ARISTOCRACY.

Are the people equal to the times? Is a question that often arises in the mind of the writer.

Not that he is without confidence in the intelligence of the people or in their ability to meet the demands there are, and will be upon them in matters of self government in the future. The question has its origin in the manifest carelessness there is on their part everywhere. They have not to the present shown any aptitude in a community sense to meet new conditions that continue to present new phases that require public attention.

These new conditions and phases had their origin and became active, in the last century and will continue to become more active in the nineteenth century as causes and inducements increase to influence combination and centralization of business effort to secure money. The following appeared in an article published in Sunday morning's JOURNAL: "There will be in the future, governments within a government and conditions that will more than equal the powers of States within a State without let or hindrance as combinations are progressing in the great Republic."

The writer used the language in the paragraph quoted as a result of a thought which came to his mind in connection with an attempt to create a government within the national government of France which had its beginning after the death of Henry IV. and during the regency of Mary De Medici or in the early part of the reign of Louis XIII. The Protestants became dissatisfied over real or imaginary wrongs and organized a government within the realm of France which was suppressed as was proper it should be the interests of civil government, which was at that time in Europe. It is said history repeats itself, which will explain the theory there is connected with the facts that occurred in France connected with a double government, or a government within a government.

When there is a strong political or other pressure there is unrest, and effort is made to impress the will of those who are restless upon the community, state or nation where it exists in such a way as will secure the desire of the dissatisfied portion of the people. There is no effort at present by combined capital to procure for itself any independent position or rights apart from the general course of government, as it controls and directs government in all of its departments.

The only effort that has been made to the present by capital to control in the future is included in attempts made to change the form of government from a simple democracy to an aristocracy, after the manner of government sought by Hamilton in opposition to the form represented by Jefferson. The effort will be continued by capital until it is secured, or until government is again directed by the people in their interest, which can only be through a democratic form such as it received from men of the revolution.

When political power is taken from capital, should such a thing come in the future under the Jeffersonian system, then there will be attempts made to form governments or systems within the simple democratic form desired by nine-tenths of the people. It is strange in appearance to those who understand the simple form given to the United States system, when bold attempts are made to change the democratic form of Jefferson to the aristocratic system sought to be given to the country by Hamilton, and it is still more strange when schemes largely promote while the work goes forward to effect the change.

Much is said about democracy and about democratic principles, but there is very little said about the facts that make up the principles. Whether silence is caused by ignorance of the facts and of their history, or is an outgrowth of carelessness about the result, is unknown. There should not be a doubt about the result of the work there is being done by those who favor the aristocratic form supported by Hamilton, provided there is no better knowledge than appears on the surface of the underlying principle of the system of Jefferson. If there is the knowledge there should be among the people respecting the system, the aristocratic there is a man-

I feared respecting the maintenance of democracy astonished, while those who favor and support the Hamilton or aristocratic system are at work doing all they can do without declaring openly their purpose to substitute aristocracy for democracy. What has been said about ignorance or carelessness by the people applies to appearance.

The writer believes there is not a cause for mourning about the knowledge of a large majority of the people respecting a general outline of the principles that make up the Jeffersonian or democratic system included in the form given to government, but the carelessness that is so pronounced is unpardonable in an intelligent people whose instincts lead them to democracy, as the only system that can give results in general intelligence for the advancement of the people and the melioration of conditions that apply to the human family, to which the great body of the American people are committed in body and spirit.

Two Terrible Todders.

Don Frazier and Elmer Cobb trudged out to Alam Creek the other day in search of feathered game. They had only one gun and nothing but No. 10 shot. The boys espied a bob-tailed cat up a tree and blazed away at him five or six times until they cut his throat with a well directed shot. The wildcat measured 43 inches.

Prospectors Getting Ready to Do Their Assessment
Work.

The editor of the JOURNAL and his localizer visited Steamboat Springs yesterday to further inspect the strike recently made there. Considerable of a rush has taken place to Steamboat during the past week. Claims have been located in every direction. Eighteen notices have already been posted in the vicinity of the springs. Lines are being carefully run and corner posts set.

Claim owners are impatiently waiting for the snow to melt in order to prospect and develop their properties. The croppings are true quartz, almost identical in appearance to those on the Comstock. The contact appears to be diorite and granite, although the latter may be superimposed upon diabase, some fragments of which have been found in the form of float. The general strike of the lead appears to be east and west, with probably a dip to the north.

The claim upon which the original strike was made is owned by the great Western Compound and Development Company. President Hopkins proposes to entitle the body of pay ore by borings, apparatus which is on the ground.

The gold is remarkably pure, running over $20 an ounce, being higher grade than mined gold.

A remarkable coincidence is that the ore is as calcareous as the richest rock in the Coon Virginia mine and is accompanied by highly mineralized hot water.

In the opinion of several mining men who have recently inspected the property there is no reasonable doubt that this is not a western extension of the Comstock.

Mr. Laur in a communication to the Academy of Science of France "On the Origin and Distribution of gold in California" mentions having found metallic gold in 1883 in deposits evidently formed by hot springs west of the Steamboat Springs.

The United States geological survey corps were camped there for some time and made a number of assays and analyses. They discovered that the waters of the springs were impregnated with gold and that the noble metal was being rapidly deposited.
